THE HENDRICKS MONUMENT.

Subscribers to the Now Completed Fund Include Many of the Country's Leading Men.

Yesterday afternoon a Journal reporter chanced to drop in upon E. C. J. Pendleton, who was at the office of the secretary, Judge Holman, with about a thousand books of the size and shape of ordinary bank deposit-books spread before him. "There," said Mr. Pendltton, "is the largest and best collection of American autographs in existence."

"How so?" inquired the reporter.

"These books," was the reply, "contain, written in ink, the autographs of the subscribers to the Hendricks monument fund. There are about 11,000 names, and many of them are the most distinguished in the country. I do not think there is a like collection on earth."

Mr. Pendleton for three years has been engaged in getting subscribers to the Hendricks monument fund and now reports that his work is over, $40,000 having been collected. "You may say." said he "that the full amount is now in the hands of Mr. F. M. Churchman, the banker, and collections have ceased." Mr. Pendleton has done a great work. He has traveled many thousands of miles

He has traveled many thousands of miles and visited the leading men of the land everywhere. "Republicans as well as Democrats," he said, "have subscribed to this fund. It was a popular subscription, and no great amount was demanded or expected of anyone. No man took a deeper and more inquisitive interest in the success of this undertaking than he who succeeded Mr. Hendricks as President of the Senate, Hon. J. J. Ingalls, of Kausas."

The reporter looked at a few of the books. In one of the Boston books he saw the names of Gen. John M. Corse, the man who held Allatoona pass, Congressmen Pat Collins and Leopold Morse; in another he noted the signatures of Grover Cleveland, D. B. Hill, Roswell P. Flower, Calvin Brice, Havemeyer, the sugar man; George Gould, Charles Lanier, Mayor Grant, and ex-Mayors Grace, Edson and Hewitt. Chicago furnishes a long list, with Potter Palmer at the head, and St. Louis and the State of Missouri furnish a great list. Every railroad in Indianapolis the largest subscription from Indiana. The names of Simon Cameron and Richard W. Thompson adorn the list, and Leland Stanford's name, as the millionaire Senator, attracts attention. The largest subscription appears after the name of W. W. Corcoran, the great Washington banker and philanthropist, who recently died. It was for $500 was for $500.

The statue is now about complete and will be shipped from Italy to this country within sixty days, when the preparing of the pedestal upon which it is to be placed will begin. No time has as yet been fixed upon for the unveiling of the statue, though many favor the 8th day of next January as an appropriate time. Minister Porter, who has seen it in Rome, is much struck with the appearance of the statue, and writes approving of the work and its artistic ment. This will be an addition to the attractions and adornment of Indianapolis of which the citizens may well be proud, and Mr. Pendleton's labor, crowned with success, should come in for no small amount of praise.

IN AND AROUND TOWN.

Canoeing on the canal these mellow autumn days furnishes a means of amusement more satisfactory than people are willing to believe who have not tested the capacity of the placid stream. The sun is not too warm to make the exercise oppressive, there is ample opportunity for conversation with the fishermen who line the banks, and the bridges at frequent intervals within the city limits remind you of those at Venice, by their difference. Further out the pinnacles of Brighton Beach, famous for its variegated patrons and energetic Sunday base-ball, relieve the landscape, and above the canal wideus into Broad-cut, which looks like a miniature lake in comparison with the ordinary width Broad-cut, which looks like a miniature lake in comparison with the ordinary width of the water-way. Still further up you can fasten your boat to the side walls of the aqueduct and watch the water pouring through the crevices into the creek below, and when you have exhausted the many picturesque views in that locality you can float home again, thankful that Indianapolis is not without one opportunity for aquatic divertisement.

It requires experience as well as intelligence to do even fairly well as a detective. A considerable number of "spotters" who travel on the street-cars are known to both drivers and conductors because they have not mastered the first principles of their profession. They have not acquired the art of observing things without seeming to notice them. "When they get on the car," said a conductor on the South Side yesterday, "they keep their eyes fastened on our registers so closely that they are sure to attract our attention, and then when they get to holding their watches on us to see that we make our runs on time they might as well have the name of their occupation painted on their backs."

Sunday dinners at the hotels have become a fixed institution with a good many residents of Indianapolis who take the remaining meals of the week at home. It gives housewives a chance to get rid, one day of the week, of the troublesome duty of looking after the family provender to a considerable extent, and makes a pleasant change for the balance of the household. A good many bonifaces contribute floral decorations for their guests on that day, in addition to making considerable additions to the menu, and the critical observer finds no difficulty in detecting the members of a hotel dinner party by their floral adornments as well as their satisfied appearance.

"One of the reasons," said Trustee Cul-len, of the Institution for the Blind, "why so few visitors are taken through all portions of that institution, is that the inmates as a rule are more sensitive about the introduction of strangers than the same number of people would be whose vision was unimpaired. They regard 'seeing people,' as they term them, as very different from themselves, and this impression usually makes them uncomfortable when strangers are present.

For Lovers of Music.

Prof. John Towers, of London, England, who has come to this city to take charge of the vocal department of the new School of Music, gave a lecture yesterday afternoon at Plymouth Church before a small audience composed mostly of ladies. Rev. J. S. Jenekes introduced Professor Towers. The lecturer is a gentleman of about sixty, with a full gray beard, and of decidedly an English appearance and speech. His address was on the subject of "Modern Singers and Singing," proneuncing g on the last syllable in the former word. The essentials for a good singer, he said, are cultivation of the voice, a knowledge of dramatic action and the Italian language. He then gave some of the qualities which should be avoided, noticeably the tremelo which worn-out singers sometimes affect to cover their exhausted voice, and the slide which the voice takes when attacking a note, bad chunclation and accent, and to illustrate these, he gave a number of examples, most of them occasioning a ripple of laughter. Professor Towers believes that an English-speaking person should receive instruction of the same, and apply to foreign teachers whose peculiarity of language affects the speech. Many good points were emphasized, and the audience testified its appreciation by applause at the close of the lecture.

Mr. Balck, the violinist engaged by the School of Music, will arrive to-day, and the violin classes will be open to-morrow, instead of Sept. 30, as announced. Mrs. S. L. Morrison and Mr. Balck will take part in the concert Friday evening, with Fraulein Wagner. Miss Wagner will play a ballade and nocturne of Chopin, a romanza of Schumann, an etude of Henselt and the Eleventh Rhapsony of Liszt. an English appearance and speech. His address

We have prepared, this season, a stock of men's and boys' clothing that is far in advance of any of our previous efforts. Our stock is so complete in every detail that no man, boy, or child, need leave our stores without finding what they want. We have made a special effort to fill the wants of those men and boys who cannot be classed under what are called "regular sizes." The long and the short, the lean and the stout men and boys will find in our stock suits and overcoats that will fit them as well as any made-to-order garments.

The ladies will certainly be interested in the new things in Suits and Overcoats that we have brought out for the little fellows.
